An Android Dog's Tale: A Sci-Fi Counter-Fantasy Novel D.L. Morrese

The Galactic Organic Development Corporation searches the galaxy for primitive sentient species to save from extinction, and then transplants colonies of them to Corporation agricultural planets where they can live happily and safely. The transplanted species survives, and the Corporation Project planets produce some of the most expensive and sought-after food in the galaxy, which it sells to developed worlds with this guarantee:

Caringly grown, cultivated and harvested by simple sentient life forms.

No artificial ingredients, pesticides, herbicides, or mechanized equipment used in processing.

Guaranteed 100% organic.

Of course, keeping the primitives primitive enough to ensure the Corporation's promise of natural purity can be a challenge, especially when they're like those it found twenty thousand years ago huddling in caves and scraping a meager and precarious existence on a pale blue planet in the Milky Way's Orion–Cygnus spiral arm. The humans keep trying to change things.
