From city to farm, back to city again, back to another farm, and finally to a small street named Kentaboo on the dividing line between Florence and Erlanger, Kentucky, this true story takes place. The book tells about living in the South from 1934 to 1952, encompassing the years of the Great Depression, World War II, and the Korean War. Says the author, "My sister Polly and I were not always Kentaboo kids. Until 1942, we were part of a close, loving community of family and friends. The Kentaboo Kids tells about these early years, followed by frequent moves, being lonely latchkey kids in a city apartment, moving to a farm, and finally coming to Kentaboo, where we again became part of a close community. In 1945, Kentaboo was the newest subdivision in Florence, Kentucky. There were many families with children, a new mission church, and plenty of new friends." Jacqueline Vater Warner was born in 1934 in Newport, Kentucky. When her sister Polly was six years old and she was six months old, the family moved to Grant's Lick, Kentucky. In 1942, when Polly was fourteen and the author was eight, World War II made it necessary to move back to Newport. After two years in the city, they moved to another farm, but only stayed one year. In 1945, they moved to Kentaboo, where the author still lives. She taught school for 27 years, before retiring in 2001. She has five children, six grandsons, and five great-grandchildren.
